Definition:

Direct object - noun or pronoun in a sentence that receives the action of a verb or shows the result of the action.

Examples:

Direct objects follow the action verb in a sentence and answer the questions "What received the action?" or "Who received the action?"

I love puppies.

Love is the verb, and puppies is the direct object because puppies receive the action.

Jimmy called Brenda yesterday.

Called is the verb, and Brenda is the direct object because Brenda received the action.

Mr. Jones gave a test to his students.

Gave is the verb, and test is the direct object because the test received the action.
