

Ugh! That hideous, and nasty graffiti on that wall! How can anyone stand this horrible art. Just looking at it sends shivers down my spine. Somebody has to send some operation to clean this up! (They did but I'll get more into that later) And even worse it's on a valuable school! Man, this school sure needs help! This is why, I think students should be able to improve their schools from activities.

To start with, if students will be able to paint on the walls, (I sure art not graffiti) it can do many benefits for schools. Such as giving schools a better look. You can brighten up the plain old hallways. Give it that spark of imagination and creativity that's inside of you! Make your school a place where people want to be and make that visit pleasurable! Secondly, morals can paint messages. Such as courage, perseverance, etc. This could lift students' spirits when they are feeling down. This reminds me of the time I started the school. The hallways were so dull I couldn't even stand the place! What I didn't know for is that for the first assignment of the school year we have to express ourselves in a moral. The next day a bomb of color set off Boom!!! Every inch of the school was exploding with color. Now this takes me to Operation Clean Slate! This operation started by a man named Michael Howard. I was at the edge of my seat when I read that Michael Howard's operation helped paint more than 700 murals. In the text Starting with a Clean Slate and a lot of Paint! Now that's a spark of imagination!

It wouldn't be fair if I didn't tell you about the way schools are teaching kids about where food comes from and give them the opportunity to create them. How you ask? Gardens! First of all it can contribute <sup>to</sup> plenty of biology classes and even get a chance to do the things some biologist do. This also is easier said than done. The students have to get muddy but also get a learning experiences. This is like the time I went to Mr. Green's biology class. I remember getting dirty planting tomatoes and carrots. Then harvesting them. The hardest part was the heat though! You can create soil and make something new too with this too. Take orange peels, orange peels, and scraps of food to make the soil richer and filled with nutrients. And to create something new? Well, just use that spark of imagination and creativity again. Now that's down and dirty! Wow Cool! That beautiful artwork in this gorgeous school! I sure wish my school could be like this. I almost want to live here! Students should be able to improve their school through activities. How can you disagree!

It is my personal belief that students should be able to participate in school activities. I feel this way because students are responsible to take care of things. It doesn't always have to be the older ones doing everything for the "young children."

First of all, students should be able to participate or at least try something an adult might do. These activities show students how to be responsible. Many people may not agree with me but, if an adult always has to do something for the little kids then how are they supposed to try new things. How would know if the students like it or not. School gardens and clean up efforts, such as picking up trash or painting walls, can teach the children the value of work. On the other hand, with many dangers these tasks present, the jobs are better left in the hands of adults. For example, students should be at least allowed to plant something in a garden. All they have to do is put a seed in then, cover the seed with dirt and lastly, they have to put water on the dirt where they covered the seed and then there DONE. Easy as that.

Second of all, you may not agree with me but, if you think that students should NOT be allowed to help the school environment then that's YOUR PROBLEM! According to the article "Keep Students Focused on School-work" claim that many parents are complaining that their kids have "too" much homework. Also having to do all that gardening is a waste of time and too dangerous for a "little kid". Students have classwork, homework, after school activities, and chores at home. Having to do all that work outside of class cuts down a child's time for fun. Many kids want to like to unwind by playing videogames, watching tv, playing outside or playing school activities or their favorite sports after school, or even take a nap. After a while it might get tiring to do the same over and over again a million times. I mean just think about it, being in the sun 24/7 sweating to death, and really, really, really, really tired and wanting to go home and just take a nap. BUT YOU CAN'T because yo "Have To" keep on planting 80 more seeds in the ground. Plus, you have to do it in the burning hot sun wich makes it even more annoying.

In conclusion, it is my personal belief that students should be able to particapate in school activities. I feel this way because student s are responsible enough to take care of things. It doesn't always have to be the older ones doing everything for the "young children".

Yes student should do activities to in improve schools because they sound fun. Also your helping the school do the hard work.

In article two Jennine Paasald Planting is good xp for you and eating it.
Also graffiti is like public art. for example if you worked at a building that's dull and someone graffitied it it would look less dull.

There is a lot of things that can help the school. You can help the school.
This will help the school so so much.
